RUCTION OVER THE CASEY BABY

Jane Bergen, Its Aunt, Suddenly Gets Idea She Owns House and Puts Out Every One Except the Infant.

LANDLADY SPENT NIGHT IN HOME FOR FRIENDLESS.

Jane Has Been Arrested Twice and Admitted to Bail, but She Is Back Holding Fort with Baby.

There is a police guard around the rooming house where Mrs. Fannie Coyle, at Nos. 361 and 363 Pearl street, Brooklyn, Mrs. Coyle, the landlady, spent last night at the Home for Friendless Women in Bridge street, and she is afraid that unless Jane Bergen moves out during the day she will have to stay there again to-night. In the meantime Jane Bergen, who has been arrested and admitted to bail twice in twenty-four hours, is sole boss of Mrs. Coyle's home.

Then the Fun Really Began.

The celebration following the christening was of long-distance order, and Jane Bergen was still at it yesterday afternoon. Suddenly she got an idea that she owned the house and started to put every one out but Casey's baby.

Mrs. Coyle moved first. She moved rapidly, too, for a woman of middle age, with a flatiron for a pacemaker. Others in the house followed her until the crowd in the street attracted the attention of Policeman Fitzmaurice.

He went into the house and arrested Jane Bergen, taking her to the Adams Street station. There she appeared to be submerged in repentance, and when the father of Casey's baby offered bail for her it was accepted. Forthwith she went back to the Coyle domicile, drove Mrs. Coyle and her roomers into the street again, and barricading the doors, held the fort all night with Casey's baby.

Feeling the need of sleep and rest, Mrs. Coyle went to the Home for Friendless Women, where she remained until this morning. As soon as Adams Street Police Court opened she went there and secured a warrant for Jane Bergen.

Jane is Arrested Again. Jane was arrested again and arraigned in court. Her hearing was postponed. Then she was arraigned on the charge on which she was arrested last night, fined and the fine was paid.

Later in the day the father of Casey's baby called her out again, and once more she went to the domicile of Mrs. Coyle, who immediately sought refuge at the Home for Friendless Women. As darkness approached this evening the roomers in Mrs. Coyle's house were preparing to move, and Jane Bergen was holding the fort with Casey's baby.

SHOT THROUGH HEART IN FIGHT

Andrew Jaeger Kills John Burke in Williamsburg—Is Quickly Caught by Police and Looked Up in Stagg Street Station.

During a fight this afternoon between Andrew Jaeger, twenty-one years old, of No. 39 North Eighth street, Williamsburg, and John Burke, thirty-four years old, of No. 141 Ten Eyck street, at Burke's home, Jaeger pulled out a gun and shot Burke through the heart, killing him.

What the men were quarrelling about is not known. The police say they had been drinking, and that there was an old grudge between them. It is believed that Jaeger sought Burke out at his home.

Jaeger attempted to escape after the shooting, but the neighborhood was aroused and Policeman Williamson captured him before he could leave the house. He was locked up in the Stagg street station.

FIREBUG TRIES TO BURN TENEMENT

That Plot, Which Endangered Lives of Fifty Persons, Failed Is Regarded as a Miracle—Oil-Soaked Papers Are Used.

MANY OTHER FIRES LAID TO INCENDIARIES.

Arrest of Man Posing as Fireman in Burning Brooklyn House May Aid in Solving Mysterious Blazes There.

An attempt was made to-day to burn down the four-story frame tenement, sheltering eight families, comprising over fifty people, at No. 37 Moore street, Williamsburg. This place is only a few doors from Nos. 13 and 15 Moore street, where seven persons were burned to death in a fire a little over a week ago.

The firebug made elaborate preparations, but was forestalled by what appears to be a miracle. Piling torn newspapers on the floor of a closet on the second floor he spilled two bottles full of kerosene over them and set the mass on fire.

Outside the closet door in the hall he left another bottle of kerosene, open. The newspapers caught fire and burned out, the wood-work and floor were charred, but the blaze extinguished itself without getting outside the closet.

The blaze was kindled some time between midnight and 1 o'clock. Mrs. Liebeschitz, the landlady, discovered the attempt to fire the house and notified the police, who sent for Fire Marshal Beers.

Had the fire gained any headway whatever the loss of life would have been heavy. The house is old and like tenements which make all the more astounding the failure of the attempt to destroy it.

In the past month there have been more than twenty-five incendiary fires in the neighborhood. Thus far there is absolutely no clue to the firebug.

POSING AS FIREMAN LANDS IN CELL

What may prove to be a step toward the solution of the mystery of the arsonist, in Brooklyn, was the arrest to-day at a fire at Nos. 477 and 479 Street of Clifford Stokes, who was masquerading in a fireman's coat and hat.

Stokes is twenty years old and lives at No. 383 Garfield place. He says he is a fire enthusiast and always follows the engines.

The third street building is a six-story double apartment-house, and the fire started in the basement, undoubtedly kindled by an incendiary. It spread up the shaft and communicated to all the flats. Passers-by on the street discovered it before it had attained great headway, and by furiously ringing the electric bells and bombarding the front windows with stones alarmed all the tenants, who escaped without injury by way of the stairways.

When the first firemen on the scene arrived the house was a roaring furnace, and two additional alarms were sent in. Truck 39 was the first piece of apparatus on the ground. An extension ladder was run to the fifth floor and firemen were ordered up with axes.

Not a Genuine Fireman. Deputy Chief Duff, after placing his men and outlining his plan to fight the fire, happened to glance upward at the ladder up which the firemen were climbing. His experienced eye told him that one of the climbers, although attired in a rubber coat and a fireman's helmet, was not a fireman. He did not go up the ladder like a fireman.

"Send that man down here!" roared the Chief; "he's no fireman."

The awkward climber who proved later on to be Stokes, had reached a window on the fifth floor at this time and had entered. The firemen following him forced him back and he slid to the ground. In the confusion he escaped for the moment.

Two more firemen started up the ladder carrying a line of hose and again Stokes started for the fifth floor. This time Chief Duff let him go, but sent a policeman up the stairs and when Stokes got into the house he was arrested.

Stole the Coat and Helmet. He was taken to the Bergen Street Station, where he said he had taken the coat and helmet from Truck 39 while the firemen were not looking. But for the experienced vision of Chief Duff he might have gone all through the house masquerading as a fireman.

"Why did you steal those clothes and go where you had no business?" he was asked.

"I like excitement," replied Stokes. "I always like to be around fires and lend a hand to the firemen. In the last three years I have saved a great deal of property here and in New Jersey."

LOCAL RACING SEASON WINDS UP AT AQUEDUCT

Sixth Race at the Long Island Course Brought Thoroughbred Sport in This State to an End—Jockey Odom Narrowly Escapes Death.

(Special to The Evening World.) AQUEDUCT RACE TRACK, Nov. 15.—Racing came to an end in this State with the running of the sixth race at Aqueduct this afternoon. There will be no more races here.

The season, marked by dramatic sharp practice on the part of horsemen and of riding on the part of jockeys that bordered on the criminal. On Thursday the season at Washington begins.

Getaway day is popularly supposed to be the day that bottled-up good things are out loose. But there were few of these sort to-day. Favorites were the winners in a majority of the races. The Roslyn Handicap went to Orthodox, a much-improved horse, who has a chance to become the McChesney of New Orleans this winter. Martin rode Orthodox badly, letting Little Em get in front of him and better him all the way through the stretch. At the end he drew away and won in a drive when he should have won easily.

The opening event came very near putting an end to the career of George J. Odom as a jockey. He was riding Collector, a heavy and wary opponent, the jockey board was bumped into and knocked over by Pasadena. Odom fell directly in front of the favorite, who made a dash for the finish, but was held back by the crowd. Odom was nearly run over by the crowd. He was unhurt, but the race was a narrow escape.

The second race was an easy victory for Go Between, the favorite, who won all the running and won easily. Pasadena, favorite in the third, won easily from the favorites who placed up thirteen pounds and showed a remarkable improvement over her last race. When Sperry's ride was complained of.

The weather was fine and nearly eight thousand people attended the races. Betting was brisk and the racing enjoyable.

Pasadena was a slight favorite in the opening event, which was a very open handicap. Race King and Collector were also well backed. Missing Link had the speed and showed the way to the stretch with Old England and Amherst next. In the run home Old England forced to the front, followed by Collector and Rapid Water. Collector looked as if he might win when Pasadena bore in on him and knocked him down. Rapid Water then drew clear and won in a length. Pasadena was a head in front of Old England and placed second. Odom had a narrow escape.

Go-Between was a hot favorite in the second race, and he justified the confidence reposed in him by the talent by racing to the front at once and staying there throughout. He won easily by six lengths from the Southerner, who was second all the way, beating Aurumaster a head in a hard drive.

Fancy Dress was the favorite in the third race, and he won in a drive when he was backed by the crowd. He won easily by six lengths from the Southerner, who was second all the way, beating Aurumaster a head in a hard drive.

Orthodox was the favorite in the fourth race, and he won in a drive when he was backed by the crowd. He won easily by six lengths from the Southerner, who was second all the way, beating Aurumaster a head in a hard drive.

Old England was the favorite in the fifth race, and he won in a drive when he was backed by the crowd. He won easily by six lengths from the Southerner, who was second all the way, beating Aurumaster a head in a hard drive.

Old England was the favorite in the sixth race, and he won in a drive when he was backed by the crowd. He won easily by six lengths from the Southerner, who was second all the way, beating Aurumaster a head in a hard drive.

Old England was the favorite in the seventh race, and he won in a drive when he was backed by the crowd. He won easily by six lengths from the Southerner, who was second all the way, beating Aurumaster a head in a hard drive.

Old England was the favorite in the eighth race, and he won in a drive when he was backed by the crowd. He won easily by six lengths from the Southerner, who was second all the way, beating Aurumaster a head in a hard drive.

Old England was the favorite in the ninth race, and he won in a drive when he was backed by the crowd. He won easily by six lengths from the Southerner, who was second all the way, beating Aurumaster a head in a hard drive.

Old England was the favorite in the tenth race, and he won in a drive when he was backed by the crowd. He won easily by six lengths from the Southerner, who was second all the way, beating Aurumaster a head in a hard drive.

Old England was the favorite in the eleventh race, and he won in a drive when he was backed by the crowd. He won easily by six lengths from the Southerner, who was second all the way, beating Aurumaster a head in a hard drive.
